1. Symposium:

Off Centre, North and South: A Symposium on Scotland and Sicily	Location
	FLINDERS UNIVERSITY, ADELAIDE, SOUTH AUSTRALIA

Geographically and culturally separate, Scotland and Sicily nevertheless share some important similarities. In particular, although each has now become part of a larger nation state, each has preserved a strong sense of cultural identity built in part on their cultural eminence in the past. Both have been economically deprived at times while remaining culturally rich. Their literature, film, art, music and politics remain distinctive and despite the loss of metropolitan status each feels it has claims to cultural independence. This distinctive identity has had positive and negative effects—fostering cultural icons but also leading to stereotypes. Situated off centre but still seeing themselves as having a crucial role in the culture of their respective nation states, Scotland and Sicily provide a fruitful area for connections, parallels, contrasts and comparison which can be extended to include all areas of Southern Italy.

Off Centre, North and South is convened by Luciana d’Arcangeli, Antonella Strambi, and Graham Tulloch.
